

John Andretti. Versatility is a word that comes to mind when discussing NASCAR Winston Cup Series driver John Andretti. With major victories in IndyCar and IMSA, and experience in just about every other kind of race car -- drag cars, midget racers, dirt cars, spring cars, you name it -- Andretti has achieved success in every racing series he's entered. But Andretti has established that he's not just a jack-of-all-trades he's no longer a curiosity from open-wheel racing. He's a NASCAR Winston Cup Series driver, and a good one. The nephew of Mario Andretti (his father is Mario's twin brother) and the godson of accomplished IndyCar and NASCAR driver A.J. Foyt, John Andretti has been a racer practically since birth. Starting with go-karts when he was only 9, Andretti always has had a focus on winning, as if it were hereditary. Andretti applies his attitude to win off the track as well. He graduated with honors from Moravian College with a B.A. in business management. He co-owns two auto parts stores and hosts a children's television show, Kids-N-Motorsports.
