

A leading expert at the nexus of economics, policy, and media, Dr. Marci Rossell delivers thought-provoking insight on a range of financial topics, including the implications and effects of industry regulatory pressure, financial reporting requirements and GDP growth. Dr. Rossell dissects the various economic factors at work, to provide a thorough analysis of the current business climate and what it may hold for your clients' portfolio.

The Senior Economic Advisor for Delphin Investments, Dr. Rossell conducts analysis that provides insight into global economic and political developments, with investment research across equities, fixed income, currencies, and commodities. Previously, as the Chief Economist for CNBC, she appeared every morning on the network's flagship program, "Squawk Box," covering the economy, the Federal Reserve and the bond market. Dr. Rossell's resume also includes serving as Corporate Economist and Investment Spokesperson for Oppenheimer Funds, Inc., a litigation consultant for Deloitte & Touche, LLP, and an economist for the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas—all of which she accomplished by age 32.

Dr. Rossell earned her Ph.D. in economics from Southern Methodist University, where she was named "Young Alumni of the Year" in 2002.

With a communication style that allows her to effectively translate complex information, Dr. Rossell makes important issues accessible for all audiences. As she breaks down the decisions and events that contributed to our evolving economic environment, she outlines the likely effects and implications of today's trends and issues, her economic outlook, and strategies and solutions for organizations to effectively map out their successful financial futures.
