

Currently, a Senior Fellow at the San Francisco based non-profit Encore.org, Paul Taylor is a well-versed speaker, writer and researcher who specializes in demographic change and generational trends. He is the author of The Next America: Boomers, Millennials and the Looming Generational Showdown (PublicAffairs), which draws on his work at the Pew Research Center, where he served as Executive Vice President from 2003 to 2014.

Paul Taylor was a newspaper reporter for 25 years, including 14 at The Washington Post, where he covered three U.S. presidential campaigns and served as bureau chief in South Africa during the historic transformation from apartheid to democracy. He is also the author of See How They Run (Knopf, 1990), and co-author of The Old News Versus the New News (Twentieth Century Fund, 1992). Paul earned his BA at Yale University and twice served as the visiting Ferris Professor of Journalism at Princeton University, and still publishes through many of the nation's leading publications from his home base in Bethesda, MD. Since the publication of the book in 2014 (with an updated edition in 2016) he has given hundreds of speeches on generational change to universities, think tanks, civic and professional organizations, elected officials, government executives, media organizations, labor unions, chambers of commerce and large corporations.

Testimonials

"Fantastic presentation! I could have listened to Paul for another couple of hours. It really helped to frame where we were; where we are today; where to go as a country to remain a "leader". Thoroughly enjoyed!! I would recommend bringing him back as a speaker in the future."

- attendee at Healthcare Quality and Equity Action Forum, Boston, MA.

"Your research and observations connect so well with our constituency. Your content and observations were pertinent to the many conversations that our members were having during the conference on enrollment, changing demographics, student affairs issues, diversity, and future-planning. Thank you once again, Paul! We are enormous fans of your research and your presentation. ... it was tremendous"

- Associate Director, Strategic Alliances - Society for College and University Planning.
